ORCAS HUMOR

A longtime Orcas Island resident was strolling along Crescent Beach one quiet evening when he spotted a battered old bottle washed up on the shore. To his surprise, faint words whispered from inside:

"TWO GONE, ONE REMAINING."

Not one to believe in genie tales, the old man figured he'd test it out with an impossible wish. He said, "Alright then—build me a bridge from Orcas Island to Anacortes!" The genie sighed. "A bridge of that size might be beyond even my powers. How about a backup wish?"

The islander thought for a long moment. Then he asked: "Alright then... explain to me how women think."

The genie fell silent, stroked his chin, and finally replied:

"Would you like that bridge two lanes... or four?"

ORCAS CAR TALK (Gray Hair Division)

I'm getting to that point in life where my motor car needs to subscribe to one simple philosophy: SIMPLER IS BETTER.

I'm tired of the new, unnecessary nonsense — screens, sensors, and whatever "AI" is supposed to be.

From now on, I've decided to only buy vehicles with ashtrays (and no, I don't smoke). Bonus points if it's got crank windows and wind wings.

Do I sound like an old curmudgeon?
Probably. I guess that is because I am.
